Kavanaugh defended the company after the same killer whale killed 3 people. (including a mentally troubled fan who had previously broken into my Austin home.) Inherent danger of some hard hitting sports is one thing. A caged predator with a proven killer track record is another.

I may have asked this before, but I can't remember: did the intruder in your house ever explain specifically what he wanted to do once inside? Just bask in your presence? It didn't seem like he was there to harm you (not that you had any way of knowing that, of course).

He was out of his mind. Claimed he saw a hologram of me as Lord British beaconing to come receive his reward, then that I trapped him inside after he broke in. Babble about cones from Ultima & my haunted houses. Then was killed by Tilikum (the original Shamu.)

Jeez. There's crazy and then there's crazy, and then there's seeing kingly holograms. And here I thought I had issues.

It reminds me somewhat of the movie "Mazes & Monsters," which was pretty much responsible for the whole "Satanic panic" myths that haunted Dungeons & Dragons well into the 90s.

Come to think of it, putting a giant flaming pentagram on Ultima 8's box didn't help my case that D&D wasn't Satanic with my mom, you know? =P

That was sort of my point. I was tired of writing games about virtue for more than a decade, and having TV evangelists still call them satanic. Since I am not a believer, and pentagrams are used in books and movies without backlash, I pushed the limits on purpose!

I was an adult when UL came out so I needed no permission. I even got the poster from Babbage's after the promotion and hung it in my living room.

Lovely! Not seen that artwork before!

Still have it today. Was the promotional poster to advertise the game's release. I was a frequent customer so the Babbage's manager saved it for me.

That's so cool. I somehow keep accumulating Ultima Bs... Not by choice, but I love them all.

One of my Ultima VII boxes looks rather bland...

After the blackness of UVL, I bet that looks gorgeous on the shelf. Love it!

The Black Gate cover being all black, was also something I had to fight hard for. So many, basically everybody didn't want me to do it. But, I can be stubborn. Not that others often don't have good ideas, but half the times I went along, I regretted it. Like the pillars on U6.
